About the Role

Responsibilities:

- Drive enterprise-wide strategy, development, implementation and maintenance of medical, patient-related, and research & development policies and guidelines.
- Ensure Novartis policies/guidelines remain innovative, compliant, and globally relevant adhering to international standards and guidance.
- Lead large, global, cross-functional teams of subject matter experts to ensure all needs are incorporated into the policies/guidelines.
- Develop guidance, training, and supporting materials to drive policy adoption worldwide.
- Shape Novartis policy framework for scientific communications in the AI era by establishing standards and guardrails that enable timely and responsible dissemination of scientific evidence while addressing risks related to AI-generated content, data accessibility, transparency, disclosure, and evidence integrity.
- Represent Novartis in external collaborations, consortia, and industry initiatives.
- Identify compliance risks and implement strategies that protect patients and safeguard reputation.
- Champion continuous improvement, operational excellence, and patient-centric decision making.

Essential for the role:

- Advanced degree in a scientific discipline.
- Significant pharmaceutical or public health industry experience.
- Deep understanding of the medical policy landscape and relevant international guidelines and regulations paired with strong business acumen
- Experience influencing senior leaders across complex global organisations.
- Proven ability to lead matrix teams and drive cross-functional initiatives.
- Strong analytical skills with experience translating external insights into strategic recommendations.
- Excellent communication and stakeholder management capabilities.
- Demonstrated success managing change, governance, compliance, and risk.

Desirable for the role:

- Doctor of Medicine or Doctor of Pharmacy qualification.
- Experience with scientific communication and digital discoverability
